

Lindsay Clancy: What has happened to women today?

BY: Mindy Rader, Rockland Post Contributor

The trial is over for Lindsay Clancy, for now. But it will be re-tried. Meanwhile the crazies are back in the street supporting this murderer. They have put the mental health system on trial, not Lindsay Clancy's actions. This leads me to ask, what has happened to women in America?

Most of the people protesting in favor of Lindsay Clancy are women. If you look at the ICE protests and antisemitism, many if not the majority are women. If you look at the internet, women don't want to bring children into the world. This is all happening at a time when women have never been so equal in American society. Look at causes in other parts of the world where women don't have rights. There are places in the world where women can't vote, they are given away as property, can't drive a car, or are forced to wear head to toe coverings so they can't be seen. They are murdered for showing their hair.

Yet in the United States we support a woman who kills her three children. To me, this is incredible. If you look at other things happening with women, you also have to shake your head. A young 32-year-old mother is killed in Times Square by a knife wielding maniac who then goes and attacks two cops who can't put her down with a taser and is shot dead. Who does the media and public sympathize with? Not the young woman who was killed but the woman who killed her because she had a mental health crisis. To me, this is incredulous.

We are living in the greatest time in history for women. Why are women not happy? Why do they feel that they have to support causes in which women will potentially become the victims? People can manipulate the mental health system in trials like Lindsay Clancy did claiming that voices told her to kill her kids but planned it very carefully. Mental illness does not always mean you don't know right from wrong. And when you hurt other people, you should be locked up. In a case where you can't be subdued with non-lethal force, you may suffer the consequences. If you don't know right from wrong, I don't believe you will ever get better, nor should you ever be released back into society. The problem with the insanity plea is that some doctor in a mental hospital will declare the patient cured. They are then sent back into society. Yet from what I can see, the experts always come down to who paid them and can they really be trusted.

Twelve people make up a jury. They must agree unanimously in criminal cases. Bravo to the one hold out who stuck to his guns. Nothing but scorn for the crazy protestors outside who take selfies with the defense lawyer and yell at the prosecutor that they are corrupt. This is a part of the sick society we have created in our higher education system and on the internet. We have created a society with a group of women who basically hate themselves and hate others, as higher education and social media double down on making us feel that the world is coming to an end, this whole situation will only get worse. If somebody is mentally ill and potentially dangerous, they should never walk the streets unsupervised because they can always stop their medicine and become "crazy" again. Our courts have ruled too far in favor of these defenses. We have created a world where murder is justified and right and wrong is determined in the streets by chanting not in a real court of law.
