

WHY DOES EVERYBODY LOVE A MURDERER?

BY: Mindy Rader, Rockland Post Contributor

Why is everybody always on the side of the murderer and never the victim? Just watching the reaction to Louis Mangione Carmello Anthony, Lindsay Clancy and all those killed by illegal immigrants whether on the road or in acts of violence. There never seems to be sympathy for the victim. Let's look at a couple of the examples I mention.

Louis Mangione is the first. Famous designer, Mark Jacobs even offered to design his suits for court. Women are lining up to support him and admire him. Some even expressing their love for him. And this is a man who in cold blood decided to gun down a health care executive because he didn't like the health care system. And yet he is admired and praised and looked up to as a hero. There is a family missing the father and there is a void in many people's lives. Mangione just goes to jail and probably will stay there one day and go on with his life. However, his victim's life is gone forever.

Carmello Anthony took a high school fight and stabbed his victim to death. Yet there are protests on the streets claiming it was self-defense and that he was convicted because the system is racist. He was a black man who killed a white person. Does that make it's ok to kill somebody of an opposite race? People contributed GoFundMe money to which the family purchased expensive homes and mansions. Where is the sympathy for the family of the kid that was killed? He had no weapon. That to me is just inconceivable.

Lindsay Clancy, a woman kills her kids and people are lining up to support her because she had "a mental health crisis". Should we do they blame? It's not her. It's got to be the pills and the doctors that took care of her. Sorry, if you kill your kids, you may as well expect to live in prison, but you should never see the light of day again.

And finally, all the people who have been killed by illegal immigrants which I can't name them all in one article. Why are there these killers here? Why do people defend them and say they should not be deported once they serve their jail term? This is beyond my comprehension. There are more examples, too many to go over each one. But they all have the same certain underlying principles. We have accepted murder and violence as a justifiable means of redressing grievances.

We have seen three assassination attempts on a President. Whether you like him or not, the solution is at the ballot box not the end of a gun. In a civilized society, people, no matter what your politics, would never celebrate an assassination attempt. No one in modern society. This is a sickness of American society.

I may not believe in the death penalty although certain days, I'm not so sure I should have that belief. People who take other people's lives should never again see the light of day. For whatever you can say about rehabilitation in prison, there is no chance that the dead will fulfill their destinies and lives. Yet parole boards are springing killers because of crazy woke ideology and forgetting there was a victim at the other end of the crime who will never be released to live their life again.

Society should remember that consequences have actions and murder is despicable. Taking a life should mean you lose your life. Not by execution but you should never again see the light of day. They should be in jail forever. Murderers do not deserve to be in a civilized society and especially not admired and propped in the media. They should spend their life in a mental hospital or in prison for the rest of their life. That is your punishment for taking another life.
